OVERVIEW

David Glod, a shareholder at the firm, primarily handles complex civil litigation.

His practice includes contract and employment disputes, securities matters, and complex land title claims. He has particular experience with family and closely-held businesses in the context of breaches of fiduciary duty, and similar partnership disputes. He frequently represents real estate developers and landowners in matters involving the organization or dissolution of real estate partnerships, or those involving the use of land, such as boundary disputes.

David also has extensive experience with securities regulation, including representing clients before FINRA, the SEC, the Massachusetts Securities Division, and other regulators. He also handles disputes between registered firms and their personnel, such as claims before FINRA seeking expungement of information from regulatory filings.

David has won jury trials in the state and federal courts, and proceedings before various regulatory bodies. He is also successful in helping clients resolve disputes short of trial, through informal negotiation, mediation or other forms of dispute resolution.

David was born in Poland and speaks fluent Polish.
